Sisters in Silence By J. J. Lamb, Bette Golden Lamb

Medical thriller about a fertility counselor who goes on a killing spree of barren women in the warped belief that this "act of mercy" will save them -- her "sisters" -- from a life of suffering. Although she hides her crimes by making the killings appear to be accidents or suicides, she is uncovered by a suspicious and persistent fertility clinic RN and her reluctant-but-efficient deputy sheriff roommate. In the process, the female nurse/deputy amateur sleuths also expose unethical and illegal practices by the fertility clinic's MD founder-owner-operator.

Editorial Review

From the Back Cover

Fertility counselor Zondra Vesey is not a serial killer--she's on a mission, a noble mission.

For ten long years she has slaved to help make one man a star specialist in the highly competitive field of infertility treatment.

Her thanks? Woman after woman sleeps in his bed, fills his life--as she once did.

Instead of loving her, his surgeon's hands sliced her open, mutilated her insides, and left her sterile, as barren as the women who flock to him for the miracle of motherhood.

Now, Zondra is angry, grief stricken, and filled with sorrow--a deadly mission burns seep within her

She will, she must save her sisters from their suffering.

About the Author

Bette Golden Lamb is a feisty ex-Bronxite who writes crime novels and plays with clay. Her sculptures and other artistic creations appear in exhibitions, galleries, and stores. She also hangs out with her 50+ rose bushes, or sneaks out to movies when she should be writing. Being an RN is a huge clue as to why she writes medical thrillers and Sci-Fi novels. Award-winning The Organ Harvesters is her latest stand-alone novel, a dystopian medical thriller.

J. J. Lamb intended to become an aeronautical engineer/pilot, but was seduced by journalism. An Associated Press career was interrupted by the Army, which provided a Top Secret clearance; a locked room with table, chair, and typewriter; and the time to write short stories. A paperback PI series followed, the most recent of which, No Pat Hands, was a 2014 Shamus Award nominee from Private Eye Writers of America. The Lambs live in Northern California and have co-authored seven medical thrillers, five in the Gina Mazzio "Bone" series, and two stand-alones, plus a husband-wife, suspense-adventure-romance

novel
