About the Author

Franklin W. Dixon and Carolyn Keene are the pen names for Edward L. Stratemeyer who originally began both series. It is not proven, but said, that his daughters updated and continued the series after their father's death in 1930.

"Come on, boys. I found a swell clue!" The Hardy Boys emerge from a 1927 time capsule, but amazingly, are unscathed. These young detectives--favorites to generations of young readers--burst into the twenty-first century, chasing a friend's stolen jalopy, uncovering a thief's disguise, digging in the garden of the Tower mansion. Bill Irwin gives a terrific performance in this first in a series of audiobooks of the boys' mystery adventures. Irwin is earnest, honest and anxious to please, yet never overplays the adventures. He engages listeners as the suspense unfolds and stays totally committed to the story. Listeners do, too. For adults listeners, here's a campy mystery to delight in. For youngsters, Irwin is likely to convert a new generation to the Hardy Boys. R.F.W. Winner of AudioFile Earphones Award © AudioFile 2002, Portland, Maine--
